Hear Ye! Hear Ye!

It is by decree of the lord and lady of Fernwood that the people of the manor are invited and ordered to attend the noble marriage of their son, Baron Bartholomew, to Lady Diana of Dunnsberry. The wedding is to take place on December Second, the one year anniversary of their meeting. A tournament of jousting pleasure is to follow to commemorate this momentous occasion in which the victorious knight will be awarded many riches plus the lady of his choice as escort for the celebration that night. Those expected to be in attendance are as follows:

Queen Genevieve-Queen. As ruler of this prosperous kingdom, Genevieve is well liked by everyone. It's hard to have many enemies when the punishment of betrayal is death!

Lord Taylor-Lord of the Manor. In celebration of his only son's marriage to the noblewoman of his choosing, Lord Taylor is determined to host a tournament of epic proportions.

Lady Gwendolyn-Lady of the Manor. Gwendolyn is delighted for the approaching tournament. To Gwendolyn, the celebration symbolizes prosperity and happiness and a chance to marry off her only son to another noble.

Baron Bartholomew-Son to the lord and lady. The tournament is planned in honor of his marriage to another noble on the one year anniversary of his and Diana's meeting. Baron's only regret is that he must marry for wealth instead of love.

Lady Diana of Dunnsberry-Noblewoman. Diana arrived in Fernwood on a quest for a husband. While her heart is now satisfied, another's may now be broken.

Maid Marilyn-Lady-In-Waiting. As Lady Gwendolyn's right-hand woman, Marilyn is like a daughter to the lady. Like a true mother, Gwendolyn will do anything to ensure Marilyn's happiness.

Sir Cameron-Knight. Sir Cameron is looking forward to entertaining and fighting for his honor in the manor tournament. If Cameron wins, rumor is that he will be asking for the favor of Maid Marilyn.

Sir Rufus-Knight. Sir Rufus is looking to boost his unfavorable reputation in the manor lands with a victory over Sir Cameron in the tournament. A triumph will not only win him the favor of a maid, but the popularity which that desires.

Joking Jerry-Court Jester. Jerry is commissioned to make everyone laugh. But at what cost does a laugh turn deadly?

Willie the Watchman-Manor Watchperson. As the guardian for the lord and his manor lands, Willie will be the force that keeps anyone from getting out of hand at the tournament.

Charlamagne-Chambermaid. Occupying the lowest tier of servant-hood in the castle, Charlamagne has unlimited access to all areas of the castle—a privilege others do not possess. While Charlamagne's knowledge of the intimate sections of the castle may be to her advantage, they may also be her ticket to trouble.

Maid Monica-Maid. Since Monica has always caught the Baron's eye (and heart), she assumed a marriage was impending. While Monica's marriage has been arranged, it is not to the person she desires.

Other announcements by the lord: An arranged marriage between Sir Rufus to Maid Monica to take place next month. Anyone not attending the wedding and celebration will be considered a traitor and will be banished from the manor.

Laws of the Land

As set forth by Queen Genevieve on how his kingdom is to be ruled

I. Betrayal of the queen is punishable by death!!!

II. The lord's word is law in his manor

- a. The only person who can overrule a lord is the queen.
- b. A manor consists of a castle, church and the surrounding lands granted to the lord by the queen.

III. Everyone that makes earnings must tithe a percentage of their earnings to the queen

- a. Percentages are set by the queen.
- b. Tithes (taxes) are collected by Sir Rufus in compliance with the wishes of the queen.

IV. The manor is to be run with a system as follows:

- a. Lords & Ladies—granted land from the queen and may run the manor as they see fit. They award land to the vassals and knights in exchange for protection from invaders. Among their duties are arranging marriages within their manor and administering justice.
- b. Vassals & Knights—are awarded land from the nobles of the manor. They are free to farm the land or pay peasants to do so. They may also have serfs that live on and farm their land.
- c. Peasants—often live in huts outside the castle walls and work on land owned by vassals or knights for a percentage of the profits. They still have their freedom, but own no land.
- d. Serfs—they are slaves to the lord for life. They farm the land for food and shelter, they are not allowed to have earthly possessions and in order to gain any freedom, they must escape and live one year plus one day in another manor. They are never required to fight, but are guaranteed protection from invaders. They need permission to marry.

V. Tournaments are to be a time of great celebration

- a. To be held to honor such events as coronation, a noble marriage or to boost the economy of a manor.
- b. The victorious knight may request the favor of any lady at the celebration. She will then be his escort for the evening.

Lady Diana of Dunnsberry

The daughter of the nobles of Dunnsberry, you have traveled to Fernwood in search of a nobleman to marry. Shortly after arriving in Fernwood, you set your sights on Baron Bartholomew, the son of Lord Taylor and Lady Gwendolyn (the lord and lady). It has taken less than a year to win the permission of the baron's father Lord Taylor (the lord), who has arranged for the marriage to take place. You are overjoyed by the impending union, even though you know that Baron Bartholomew's heart is not with you, but with Maid Monica, his childhood sweetheart. It is of little concern to you that you are breaking up Bartholomew's and Monica's romance if it means getting noble status. Knowing this, you are aware that Maid Monica may try to ruin your wedding and your marriage at the tournament because she is still bitter over your union with Bartholomew.

At least this is your story and you are sticking to it. In reality, you are but a serf woman from Dunnsberry. Since birth, you have longed for your freedom and in order to gain it, by the laws of the land, you must escape your lord's manor and travel to another manor and stay there one year and one day without anyone noticing. To make your dream come true, you stole some clothing and possessions from the true Lady Diana of Dunnsberry and traveled all this way to Fernwood to start a new life.

Since the manors of Dunnsberry and Fernwood are very distant, you have depended on the fact that no one would travel between the two manors and recognize you. However, this assumption was wrong. Sir Rufus, who was a knight in Dunnsberry, has recently made his new residence as a knight in Fernwood. Since you fear that Sir Rufus will recognize you, you have done everything you can to stay away from him. Coincidentally, you also know that Sir Rufus was banned from your former kingdom, a disgrace no one wants public. Hence, IF Sir Rufus were to threaten to reveal your identity, you are willing to blackmail him with his past.

It is vital that Sir Rufus does not recognize you as a serf and not as the true Lady Diana of Dunnsberry, for you are so close to winning your freedom. Your wedding and the tournament fall on your one year anniversary of when you entered the manor. You must make sure NO ONE knows of your serf status the whole night, or you will be doomed to a life of slavery in Dunnsberry.

Acting and Dressing Your Part: You are a noblewoman, but really you are a serf at heart. You are gentle and kind to those who you know are going through the same travesties that you have had to endure (other serfs and peasants) and you have little sympathy for those who are wealthy. Regardless, you know that your freedom depends on you keeping good relations with all, so you will try to fit in as best as possible. It is IMPORTANT that you bring something to the party that you make yourself, such as cookies. You may ask the host what they would like you to bring if you choose, or just show up with a dish to share. Since you are trying to pass yourself off as a noblewoman, dress in your medieval best with clothes made with expensive fabrics, such as silk and velvet. Remember that it is your wedding day, so wearing white would be most appropriate. For more information, including on ideas on how to dress, who will be at the party, some olde English words to use, etc., please see the party tips page at www.nightofmystery.com or www.aknightofmurder.com
