Hear Ye! Hear Ye!

It is by decree of the lord and lady of Fernwood that the people of the manor are invited and ordered to attend the noble marriage of their son, Baron Bartholomew, to Lady Diana of Dunnsberry. The wedding is to take place on December Second, the one year anniversary of their meeting. A tournament of jousting pleasure is to follow to commemorate this momentous occasion in which the victorious knight will be awarded many riches plus the lady of his choice as escort for the celebration that night. Those expected to be in attendance are as follows:

Queen Genevieve-Queen. As ruler of this prosperous kingdom, Genevieve is well liked by everyone. It's hard to have many enemies when the punishment of betrayal is death!

Lord Taylor-Lord of the Manor. In celebration of his only son's marriage to the noblewoman of his choosing, Lord Taylor is determined to host a tournament of epic proportions.

Lady Gwendolyn-Lady of the Manor. Gwendolyn is delighted for the approaching tournament. To Gwendolyn, the celebration symbolizes prosperity and happiness and a chance to marry off her only son to another noble.

Baron Bartholomew-Son to the lord and lady. The tournament is planned in honor of his marriage to another noble on the one year anniversary of his and Diana's meeting. Baron's only regret is that he must marry for wealth instead of love.

Lady Diana of Dunnsberry-Noblewoman. Diana arrived in Fernwood on a quest for a husband. While her heart is now satisfied, another's may now be broken.

Maid Marilyn-Lady-In-Waiting. As Lady Gwendolyn's right-hand woman, Marilyn is like a daughter to the lady. Like a true mother, Gwendolyn will do anything to ensure Marilyn's happiness.

Sir Cameron-Knight. Sir Cameron is looking forward to entertaining and fighting for his honor in the manor tournament. If Cameron wins, rumor is that he will be asking for the favor of Maid Marilyn.

Sir Rufus-Knight. Sir Rufus is looking to boost his unfavorable reputation in the manor lands with a victory over Sir Cameron in the tournament. A triumph will not only win him the favor of a maid, but the popularity which that desires.

Joking Jerry-Court Jester. Jerry is commissioned to make everyone laugh. But at what cost does a laugh turn deadly?

Willie the Watchman-Manor Watchperson. As the guardian for the lord and his manor lands, Willie will be the force that keeps anyone from getting out of hand at the tournament.

Charlamagne-Chambermaid. Occupying the lowest tier of servant-hood in the castle, Charlamagne has unlimited access to all areas of the castle—a privilege others do not possess. While Charlamagne's knowledge of the intimate sections of the castle may be to her advantage, they may also be her ticket to trouble.

Maid Monica-Maid. Since Monica has always caught the Baron's eye (and heart), she assumed a marriage was impending. While Monica's marriage has been arranged, it is not to the person she desires.

Other announcements by the lord: An arranged marriage between Sir Rufus to Maid Monica to take place next month. Anyone not attending the wedding and celebration will be considered a traitor and will be banished from the manor.

Laws of the Land

As set forth by Queen Genevieve on how his kingdom is to be ruled

I. Betrayal of the queen is punishable by death!!!

II. The lord's word is law in his manor

- a. The only person who can overrule a lord is the queen.
- b. A manor consists of a castle, church and the surrounding lands granted to the lord by the queen.

III. Everyone that makes earnings must tithe a percentage of their earnings to the queen

- a. Percentages are set by the queen.
- b. Tithes (taxes) are collected by Sir Rufus in compliance with the wishes of the queen.

IV. The manor is to be run with a system as follows:

- a. Lords & Ladies—granted land from the queen and may run the manor as they see fit. They award land to the vassals and knights in exchange for protection from invaders. Among their duties are arranging marriages within their manor and administering justice.
- b. Vassals & Knights—are awarded land from the nobles of the manor. They are free to farm the land or pay peasants to do so. They may also have serfs that live on and farm their land.
- c. Peasants—often live in huts outside the castle walls and work on land owned by vassals or knights for a percentage of the profits. They still have their freedom, but own no land.
- d. Serfs—they are slaves to the lord for life. They farm the land for food and shelter, they are not allowed to have earthly possessions and in order to gain any freedom, they must escape and live one year plus one day in another manor. They are never required to fight, but are guaranteed protection from invaders. They need permission to marry.

V. Tournaments are to be a time of great celebration

- a. To be held to honor such events as coronation, a noble marriage or to boost the economy of a manor.
- b. The victorious knight may request the favor of any lady at the celebration. She will then be his escort for the evening.

Lady Gwendolyn

As the Lady of the manor of Fernwood, you are happily married to Lord Taylor (your husband) and find it a joy to serve Queen Genevieve (the queen). In the years the two of you have ruled over Fernwood, your manor has done nothing but prosper. Since the queen has not visited in many years, you are excited for his anticipated arrival for the tournament celebration. The queen's visit will allow him to witness first hand the productivity and peaceful status of Fernwood.

In addition, your excitement for the festivities is strong since the tournament celebration is being held to honor the marriage of your only son, Baron Bartholomew, to Lady Diana of Dunnsberry (a noblewoman). Although you are regretful that Bartholomew will not be marrying Maid Monica (his true love - a vassal's daughter), you find that your husband did the right thing by arranging a marriage with Lady Diana of Dunnsberry - a better political and social match for your son and his standing. (As lord, Lord Taylor is in charge of arranging all of the marriages in the manor.)

Another marriage that you are hoping that your husband will soon arrange is the marriage of Maid Marilyn (your lady-in-waiting) to Sir Cameron, your most valiant knight on the manor. Because she is your assistant, you have a strong, motherly bond to Maid Marilyn and wish that she will get to marry the man that she adores. At the tournament, the winning knight will get to pick the favor of the maid he chooses. As such, you suspect that Sir Cameron will be asking for Maid Marilyn's favor (escort) at the tournament if he wins. However, as valiant as Sir Cameron may be, you suspect that there may be something going on between him and Charlamagne (the chambermaid). Earlier this morning, you saw Charlamagne coming out of Sir Cameron's room just before the tournament started. Since you do not want to break Maid Marilyn's heart unintentionally, you intend to find out just what business Charlamagne has with Sir Cameron before making Maid Marilyn aware of the situation.

As the wedding, tournament and celebration quickly approach - you can't wait to attend! You anticipate having a full house of jovial spirits and find this will be the perfect way to show off your prosperous community to your rulers!

Acting and Dressing Your Part: As the lady of the manor, you consider yourself the figurehead of the kingdom and will dress elegantly and with sophistication. Your manor has done very well financially, so you have many riches which allow you to buy nice, bright clothes made of expensive fabric, like silk and velvet. As a loving ruler, you treat the citizens and subjects of your manor with dignity and respect, for you know without them you would not be as rich as you are. For more information, including on ideas on how to dress, who will be at the party, some olde English words to use, etc., please see the party tips page at www.nightofmystery.com or www.aknightofmurder.com
